. Thanks to 2020, the longest year on record, Hollywood largely was put on pause. Long-awaited horror films, like director Nia DaCosta's Jordan Peele-produced quasi-sequel to Candyman and Edgar Wright's time-travel flick Last Night in Soho, were forced to move their premiere dates in the wake of global lockdown. Halfway through 2021, dates have continued to shift and find a new spot, now that theaters have safely reopened. Thankfully, streamers have also stepped in to debut upcoming films and ones we missed in 2020, so there's plenty to look forward to when it comes to bloody good horror fun. Reboots and sequels are king this year, with Spiral and Halloween Kills hoping to tug at our nostalgic heart strings and reel us back in. But along with the old favorites there's the potential new ones from familiar faces in the horror scene. James Wan, of Insidious, Saw, and The Conjuring fame is back with a new release that we'll probably have to watch with the lights on. Plus, actors Jesse Plemons and Keri Russell will take a stab at supernatural scares (and maybe live to tell the tale) in a new film produced by Oscar-winner Guillermo Del Toro. Fingers crossed there's no more delays and we'll have more than enough horror to get us through the rest of the year. Here are 11 horror movies we're eager to see in 2021, from the ones that'll make us jump in our seats to the just plain gory.

After nine films, it's hard to believe that the Saw franchise still hasn't met its own fateful end, but we have reason to believe the next era of Jigsaw is worth watching: Chris Rock is starring in the new reboot alongside Samuel L. Jackson. And based on the trailer, the film will bring back some memorable games. Who says a reboot has to reinvent the wheel?Spiral is out in theaters now. Stream It Here A Quiet Place Part II picks up where its predecessor left off. Following Lee's death (John Krasinski) and the knowledge that sound is both their weakness and weapon, the family of three forges on, only to encounter foes of the human kind. Also starring Cillian Murphy. A Quiet Place Part II is out in theaters now. The Conjuring: The Devil Made Me Do It The Conjuring universe has produced so many of its own franchises and films, from Annabelle to The Nun, it's hard to name them all. The beauty of The Conjuring films themselves is that they are perfect stand-alones. The third film explores yet another terrifying case by Ed and Lorraine Warren, and we'll be hiding under the covers in anticipation.The Conjuring 3 is in theaters now and on HBOMax.Stream it Here We get it: The Purge franchise is polarizing, and for good reason; the first film was a stinker, but the movies have gotten progressively better when the series' creators realized the appeal of the series was, in fact, the relentless, decriminalized violence. We want the next Purge and we want it now. Release date: July 2, 2021 Escape Room: Tournament of Champions The first Escape Room received mixed reviews from critics, but its sequel hopes to be a winner. The two winning contestants of the original are sucked back in, and have to help a new group survive the game's simple rule: Escape, or die. Along the way, the contestants look to put a stop to the Saw-like horror competition.Release Date: July 16, 2021 M. Night Shyamalan's newest film is a horror flick made for summer. A family goes to the beach for a day of fun in the sun. The getaway devolves into terror when they realize they're aging at a rapid pace. How rapid? Each family member only has one day to live. You may want to reschedule your beach vacation after this one.Release Date: July 23, 2021 A few years back, Don't Breathe quietly entered theaters. It was a stellar movie with an even more stellar premise. Still, it seemed like the buzz around the film didn't really pan out in the way that it should have. Fortunately, audiences will get reacquainted with the villain at the center of the film with its long-awaited sequel. Again, we don't know much, but we do know we're in for another wild ride. (No trailer yet either, but relish in the original flick's teaser.)Release date: August 13, 2021 A year after its premiere at Sundance, The Night House is coming to Netflix. Director David Bruckner, of V/H/S and The Ritual helms the film about a widow experiencing haunting at the lake house her late husband built for her. Expect twists and turns and jump scares.Release Date: August 20, 2021 MH cover star Yahya Abdul-Mateen II stars in this quasi-sequel to the 1992 original about a mythical killer with a hook for a hand, summoned by name by those willing to face him in the mirror. Directed by Nia DaCosta (recently hired to direct The Marvels for the MCU), and with Get Out and Us' Jordan Peele as a co-writer and producer, Candyman seems sure to become another classic.Premiere date: August 27, 2021 Director James Wan, who co-created Insidious and Saw, has a brand new horror film called Malignant. There's not much information on what the film is about, and all we have so far is a promo from HBOMax's release roundup in January and a picture on Wan's Instagram. But if Wan's track record says anything, it could be the start of a new horror franchise when it drops later this year.Premiere Date: September 10, 2021 The Halloween franchise has gone through its own revival after the success of the 2018 reboot. Now, we have not one, but two Halloween movies to look forward to. In 2021, we'll have the first of the duo of flicks, Halloween Kills, with the original scream queen, Laurie Strode (Jamie Lee Curtis) returning once more to fight Michael Myers.Premiere date: October 15, 2021 We don't know much about Edgar Wright's Last Night in Soho. But we do know Wright's teaming up with actress Anya Taylor-Joy, who previously worked on one of the best horror films of the decade, The Witch. Frankly, we're already sold.Premiere date: October 22, 2021 Ken Russell (The Americans) and Jesse Plemons (Judas and the Black Messiah, Black Mirror) star in this supernatural horror film about a young boy whose family is hiding... something. Also it's produced by Oscar-winner Guillermo Del Toro, so as far as movies we're excited about this year, it's a no-brainer.Premiere Date: October 29, 2021 Dear Lifehackers, I'm very excited about the release of an upcoming film, but its release is the same weekend as my wedding. Naturally, I don't want to disappoint my bride-to-be, but I'd still like to see the movie. Is there somehow a legal way I can watch it before it's released? Sincerely, Eager for Early AdmissionDear EEA,While there's never a guarantee that you'll be able to see a movie before it's released, there are several things you can do to try and make it happen. You'll have the best luck in bigger cities like Los Angeles and New York, but I've lived in Boston and smaller cities and have been able to find advanced screenings from time to time. If an active film community exists in the area you should be in good shape. With that criterion met, here's where to look and what to do to try and earn yourself some pre-screening tickets.Get on a Pre-Screening ProgramPre-screening programs get you free, advanced tickets to a lot of movies. Most frequently they're genre films and comedies, so if you're looking to see a drama prior to its release you probably won't have much luck. You also don't get to pick and choose which movies you see. You'll simply be contacted if a screening is available and the company needs someone in your age group. Pre-screenings are often overlooked to make sure the theater is packed, so you have to get there early and wait in line for awhile. It's really not an idea, situation, but if you want to see a movie before it's released and pay nothing at all, these programs give you the option.One of the most popular advanced screening programs is The Screening Exchange. It's based in Los Angeles but they operate nationally. You just sign up on their web site and you'll receive emails when screenings are available. If you want to find other companies, just do a web search for "advanced movie screenings" and the name of your city (or nearest big city). This will turn up additional results.Use Social MediaSocial media can be a huge help when you're looking for advanced screenings. A web search for "advanced movie screenings twitter" or "advanced movie screenings facebook" plus the name of your city (or nearest big city) will provide you with accounts and pages that post about the latest options. For example, @MassScreenings came up right away when I did a Twitter search for Boston. There was even a MeetUp group. You may not always find options, but if there are a fair amount of screenings in your area there's probably someone who's tracking them on social media.Check Screening Schedules at Local Film SchoolsMany film schools bring in special guests on a regular basis to show their films. Sometimes these films are several years old but sometimes they're yet to be released. Check the film schools in your area to find out if they have screenings. If they do, you can usually find a schedule online or call to get one. In the event that the school is screening the movie you want to see, you have a couple of options. First, if security is lax you can probably just sneak in. Alternatively, you can bribe a student to help you get in. If you'd prefer a safer route, set some time aside to take a tour of the film school. When the tour is over, talk to someone in admissions about attending some classes, such as the particular screening you want to see. Most of the time they'll agree.Check Screening Schedules at Film SocietiesFilm societies can be a great resource for advanced screenings and they are everywhere, from San Francisco, CA to Sarasota, FL to Austin, TX to the Twin Cities of Minnesota. Find a film society in your area and check their screening schedule. Most of the time you'll find advanced screenings of mostly dramas and independent films, so film societies are a good place to look if you're not in the market for a blockbuster Hollywood movie.See If the Film Is Playing at an Upcoming Film FestivalFilm festivals are generally seen as a platform for independent films, but there are plenty of bigger movies that screen as well. Often times they are part of gala events and require expensive passes, but you can sometimes circumvent this problem by waiting in a line. The rules will depend on the festival, but if one is underway when you want to see an advanced screening you should definitely check its schedule to see if the option is available. You may be pleasantly surprised.Get on Movie Theater Mailing ListsAlthough movie theaters generally won't screen films too far in advance, occasionally they'll offer tickets a few days ahead of release if you're a member of their mailing list. It may be yet another email in your inbox, but it doesn't take long to scan for advanced screening options and hit delete if you don't find anything appealing. While none of these options can promise you an advanced seat at the theater, they're a good start. It can be fun to see a movie before it's out, but ultimately it's just a film. If you have to wait a little longer than everyone else, the movie will still be there when you get back and you'll be all the more excited to see it. Give this stuff a shot, but don't be too disappointed if you have to wait. Love, Lifehacker
