CONDITIONAL SENTENCES

Conditional sentences have two parts:

the if-clause (hypothesis) and the main clause (the result clause)

Ex: If you post the invitations today, they will arrive on time

When the if-clause precedes the result clause, we separate the two clauses with a comma

Conditional s are usually introduced by IF, UNLESS. The following expressions can be used instead of "if" providing, provided (that), as long as, in case, on condition (that), but for (= without), otherwise, or else, what if, supposing, even if, only if.

Unless you reserve a ticket, you won't get a seat.

You will get a seat providing/provided (that)/as long as/only if you reserve a ticket

Only if you reserve a ticket, will you get a seat (inversion when starting by only if)

Reserve a ticket, otherwise or else you won't get a seat

What if it rains, will you still go for a pionic with him?

Supposing it rains, will you still go for a pieme with him?

Will you still go for a pionic with him even if it rains?

But for him, I wouldn't have been able to survive.

There are three types of conditionals:

 ZERO TYPE: the time is now or always and the situation is real and possible. They are used to make statements about the real world, and often refer to general truths, such as scientific facts.

If you heat water,

If it rains,

IF+PRESENT SIMPLE - PRESENT SIMPLE ice melts you get wet

. FIRST TYPE: it expresses possible or likely present or future situations. The present simple tense is always used to establish the condition. IF+PRESENT SIMPLE - FUTURE SIMPLE

MODAL IMPERATIVE

we'll go for a walk If you finish work early, If you have finished your coffee, we can pay the bill if you are ill, see the doctor)
